SANDERS, J.—We are asked to decide under the Manufactured/Mobile Home Landlord-Tenant Act (MHLTA), chapter 59.20 RCW, whether a landlord and tenant can lawfully agree to a 25-year lease that will convert to a one-year lease if the tenant assigns it. Because the MHLTA expressly preserves the right of a landlord and tenant to negotiate and agree to the term of a rental agreement, this agreed-to provision does not violate the MHLTA.

Facts

Petitioner Little Mountain Estates MHC LLC operates a manufactured home community intended for the elderly. To entice new residents the owner offered individuals a 25-year lease with rent increases tied to the Consumer Price Index. According to the rental agreement this 25-year term was only available to the original tenant; if the tenant assigned the lease to another party, the assigned lease would be for one or two years.¹ When formulating the offer, the owner determined that a 25-year lease with a fixed rent increase would not be profitable when a resident stayed for the entire length of the lease, but that loss would be offset by those who assigned their leases before the 25-year term expired. This trade-off balanced financial security for the tenants by having fixed rent for 25 years and profit for the park owners because the financial security attracted more tenants and the full 25-year term would not be exercised in its entirety in most cases.

Every tenant had the opportunity to read the rental agreement prior to signing; every tenant signed it; and no tenant objected to the assignment provision at that time. Later, some tenants assigned their leases and Little Mountain Estates Tenants Association brought suit claiming the assignment provision violated the MHLTA and the Consumer Protection Act (CPA), chapter 19.86 RCW.

The trial court held the lease did not violate the MHLTA or the CPA and the tenants were bound by the terms of the leases they voluntarily signed. The Court of Appeals reversed the trial court's determination that the MHLTA was not violated. Little Mountain Estates Tenants Ass'n v. Little Mountain Estates MHC LLC, 146 Wn. App. 546, 561, 192 P.3d 378 (2008) (Little Mountain).

Standard of Review

The court reviews statutory interpretation de novo. State v. Williams, 158 Wn.2d 904, 908, 148 P.3d 993 (2006) (citing Am. Cont'l Ins. Co. v. Steen, 151 Wn.2d 512, 518, 91 P.3d 864 (2004)). Where the plain language of the statute is unambiguous, the statute's plain meaning should be enforced. State v. Armendariz, 160 Wn.2d 106, 110, 156 P.3d 201 (2007) (citing State v. J.P., 149 Wn.2d 444, 450, 69 P.3d 318 (2003)).

The issue is whether under the MHLTA a landlord and tenant can agree to a 25-year rental term with fixed rent increases that becomes a one- or two-year term if the tenant assigns the rental agreement. The MHLTA expressly permits a landlord and tenant to negotiate the term of their rental agreement. RCW 59.20.090(1) provides: “Unless otherwise agreed rental agreements shall be for a term of one year.” (Emphasis added.) Here, the landlord and tenants agreed to a varying term based upon whether the rental agreement was assigned. Nothing in the MHLTA precludes the term of the rental agreement from being determined by a formula or linked to the tenant’s decision to assign the lease. Cf. Vance v. Villa Park Mobilehome Estates, 36 Cal. App. 4th 698, 708, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 723 (1995) (The California Court of Appeals held, because the Mobilehome Residency Law allowed the landlord and tenant to determine the rental rate, the parties were permitted to determine the rent by any formula to which they agreed, including a formula increasing rent upon assignment.).

The tenants argue the assignment provision requires tenants to waive their right to assign their 25-year leases and thus is unenforceable. The MHLTA protects a tenant’s right to assign his or her rental agreement and renders unenforceable any contract provision that waives that right. See RCW 59.20.060(2)(d), .073(1). However, the tenants’ position mischaracterizes the rental agreement. The MHLTA permits parties to agree to the term of the rental agreement, RCW 59.20.090(1), and the parties here did agree to a term of 25 years for the original tenant and one or two years if assigned. Tenants are precluded from assigning a 25-year term because their rental agreements never provided an assignable 25-year term.² However, they are not prevented from assigning, nor did they waive their right to assign, the rental agreement.³

Respondents also argue that upholding the assignment provision contradicts the legislative intent statements of the MHLTA. However, statements of legislative intent are irrelevant to a court's analysis when the statutory language is unambiguous. See Armendariz, 160 Wn.2d at 110 (citing

² This does not open the gates for a landlord to surreptitiously circumvent a tenant's right under the MHLTA to assign his or her rental agreement by adding an assignment provision that essentially extinguishes the lease. Here we address an assignment provision that affects the term of the rental agreement; the MHLTA specifically provides that the parties can agree upon the term of the lease. Furthermore, the assignment provision provides for, at minimum, a one-year term. A one-year term is the default term set forth in the MHLTA. See RCW 59.20.090(1); see also, RCW 59.20.050(1). We have no occasion here to determine whether a shorter term might run afoul of the MHLTA or raise issues of unconscionability.

Conversely, the common law preserves citizens' freedom to contract. See, e.g., Clements v. Olsen, 46 Wn.2d 445, 448, 282 P.2d 266 (1955) ("Courts do not have the power, under the guise of interpretation, to rewrite contracts which the parties have deliberately made for themselves."); Torgerson v. One Lincoln Tower, LLC, 166 Wn.2d 510, 517, 210 P.3d 318 (2009) ("It is black letter law of contracts that the parties to a contract shall be bound by its terms." (quoting Adler v. Fred Lind Manor, 153 Wn.2d 331, 344, 103 P.3d 773 (2004))). Here, common law supports, and RCW 59.20.090(1) expressly preserves, the parties' freedom to negotiate the term of the rental agreement.

J.P., 149 Wn.2d at 450). Unambiguous statutory language is enforced as written.

Id. RCW 59.20.090(1) unambiguously preserves the right of a landlord and tenant to negotiate and agree to the term of the rental agreement.

Even if this court were to look to statements of legislative intent as the Court of Appeals erroneously did, see Little Mountain, 146 Wn. App. at 560, those statements do not support voiding the assignment provision here. RCW 59.22.010(2) sets forth the multiple legislative purposes of the MHLTA. The first is to maintain low-cost housing to benefit the elderly. Here, an initial 25-year term with fixed increases in rent provides secured housing and financial stability to the elderly who live there, and the assignment provision makes that 25-year term economically feasible for the manufactured home park. The legislature also sought “to obtain a high level of private financing for mobile home park conversions” and “to help establish acceptance for resident-owned mobile home parks in the private market.” Id. Permitting a park owner to offer contractual terms that provide attractive yet profitable features to prospective residents encourages additional private financing and market growth.

Respondents ask this court to deem unenforceable any provision that alters the contract upon assignment. However, this contract does not alter an assignment; it provides in the original contract what would happen in that eventuality. Nothing in the MHLTA imposes a wholesome prohibition on such assignment provisions. The MHLTA does not prevent landlords from offering special terms to the tenants who first move into a new mobile or manufactured home park.⁴ Such a practice is not uncommon when a landlord is attempting to populate a new rental community.

Ultimately, the core of respondents' argument is that the rental agreement here was misleading, that labeling the contract as a "25 Year Lease Agreement" but including a provision that converted the term to one or two years upon assignment was deceptive or unfair. That claim is one under the CPA, not the MHLTA. Respondent's CPA claim is not before this court on review; the Court of Appeals remanded the CPA claim for further factual findings to determine whether the tenants could prove a CPA violation. See Little Mountain, 146 Wn. App. at 563.

CONCLUSION

We hold the assignment provision does not violate the MHLTA and the

MHLTA does not render it unenforceable. The Court of Appeals decision is reversed to the extent it is inconsistent with this holding. Respondents' remaining claim under the CPA is remanded to the trial court as is the claim for an award of reasonable attorney fees under RCW 59.20.110.
